Sunoco Chemicals plant simplifies lives

By BOB WITHERS - The Herald-Dispatch
bwITHERS@herald-dispatch.com

NEAL -- The next time you install new carpet, eat a bag of Fritos, buy a shirt or have that gash on your arm stitched up, think of Sunoco Chemicals. The Wayne County plant just made your life easier.

Sunoco Chemicals' Neal plant, one of the country's major producers of polypropylene resins, turns out more than 500 million pounds of the pelletized product each year.

The 95-acre facility, which opened in 1961, has produced the single product all along.

The plant is one of several in the Tri-State Area -- including Sunoco Chemicals' own Haverhill, Ohio, phenol facility; The Dow Chemical Co.'s Ironton plant that produces Styrofoam, polystyrene pellet and an expanded polyethylene foam; and Ashland Specialty Chemicals that makes a variety of industrial petrochemicals -- that keeps the economy robust by providing the substances industry needs to stay productive.

The Neal plant receives its basic raw material, a colorless gas alternately called propylene or liquefied petroleum gas, by rail (70 percent) and a pipeline (30 percent) from Marathon Ashland Petroleum that runs under the Big Sandy River.

Once the product is polymerized into a white powdery substance by being blown through two 145-foot-tall loop reactors at 20 feet per second, it is blended with special -- and confidential -- additives to meet customers' special needs, melted, forced into dies and cut into pellet form for shipping.

Most of the finished product (more than 99 percent) is loaded into Center Flow and covered hopper cars for movement on Norfolk Southern trains to 25 industrial customers -- most of which are located within 500 miles of the plant. The remainder (less than 1 percent) moves out by truck.

The plant produced 2 million pounds of product the year after it opened and turned out 504 million pounds last year -- in 125 different grades.

And it's all done safely, says David Earl, the plant's manager of administration. "We have state-of-the-art safety systems that monitor potential leaking sources," he says. "And we have virtually no volatile organic compound emissions."

So what, you say? What does all of this have to do with you? Well, for one thing, there's carpet. Mohawk's Aladdin and Berber brands use polypropylene fibers, which make the carpeting stain-resistant.

"Carpeting is the biggest use of our product," says plant manager Mark Anderson.

But many brands and styles of clothing use the fibers, too. And the polypropylene varieties that end up as wrapping material protect everything from snack foods to compact discs.

And don't forget the sutures. The plant has extruders that produce 70,000 pounds of product each hour, but it has held onto one old-timer that works at a rate of 600 pounds an hour because it makes the sutures.

"Predominantly all the sutures used in the United States are made here," says Gary Blevins, training superintendent.

Is expansion in the offing at Neal?

"We would like to; we have the room out there," Anderson says. "We do plan to spend $1 million in capital expenditures in 2002, but Sunoco is in a mood right now to go out and buy plants rather than build them. This plant probably is the cheapest producer of polypropylene resin in North America."
